08:30 Unification - The Last East German Government

East Germany's only democratically legitimate government, led by Lothar de Maizière, served for less than two hundred days – from 18 March to 2 October 1990. It was a time of intense dynamics, massive time pressure and constantly changing conditions. The foundations of German Unification were laid in those six months, as the cabinet achieved its single goal: rendering itself redundant. With its accession to the Federal Republic of Germany, the East German state ceased to be after less than forty years in existence.

16:30 The Day the Deutschmark Arrived
German Monetary Union - 20 Years On

1 July 1990 was the day monetary union between East and West Germany took effect. For many citizens of East Germany, it was a special moment in their life. The Deutschmark was a symbol of the economic miracle and resultant wealth in West Germany. Politicians saw currency union as the only way to stem the flow of people out of East Germany and mounting protests in the dying East German state. The message from the people was clear: "If we get the Deutschmark, we will stay, otherwise we will go after it." Despite warnings from economists, the two states' leaders opted for immediate monetary union.

22:30 Germans and Germans - One Country, One Nation?

For twenty years, Germans have been living together again in a single state. In the East, the roads are no longer full of pot holes, and city centers have been restored to their former glory. The Berlin Wall has disappeared to the extent that city authorities considered putting parts of it back up for the tourists. Yet Germans still have trouble seeing themselves as one people. Communist East Germany is still more present in many people's minds than they would have thought twenty years ago. Back then, people in the East yearned for the apparently unlimited opportunities of western lifestyles. Today, many have an obscure nostalgia for the past.

Damals in der DDR – Das letzte Jahr - Vereint für immer

Der Zug in Richtung Wiedervereinigung nimmt immer schnellere Fahrt auf ... "Herr Hauptmann, ich begrüße Sie in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland." So wird Henrik Strehlow am 3. Oktober 1990 geweckt. Er ist der Dienst habende Offizier des Pionierregimentes 3 der Nationalen Volksarmee. Am diesem Tag hört seine Armee auf zu existieren. Zum ersten Mal zieht Strehlow die Uniform des einstigen Klassenfeindes, der Bundeswehr, an. Aufbau und Abwicklung, Hoffnung und Verzweiflung – dieser Gegensatz begleitet die Menschen in den Monaten nach der Wiedervereinigung.
