My Body, My Heart

The heart is the most unusual muscle in our body. It works tirelessly, begins beating in the womb and can even continue functioning when the brain fails. Yet, when we're young, we barely pay any attention to it.
29-year-old twins Naomi and Joëlle Karfich are active, have healthy diets and feel fit. But when it comes to their hearts, they don't have much to go on. They're unaware of any potential genetic risks or how their heart health has been measured up to now. That's why they've come to see Conchita Ruiz-Mohné, in Cologne.

The cardiologist is an expert in female cardiovascular medicine, a field that has long been neglected. Women's hearts differ from men's, and often present subtler heart attack symptoms. This can lead to dangerously late diagnoses. Every minute counts in a heart attack: as soon as the blood supply stops, heart tissue begins to die, irretrievably.

Paramedic Celine Kilian shows how to respond quickly and correctly in the event of a heart attack. This is knowledge that may very well come in handy one day: Heart attacks are the most common cause of death in Germany. Younger people are increasingly affected - especially younger men, under 40.

Ferruccio Labita, who had a heart attack at the age of 38, is one of them. Today, he trusts his heart again - and is a passionate competitive cyclist. But he's learned never to exceed his own physical limits.

One major risk factor is stress. Chronic interpersonal stress can cause heart disease - even leading to what's known as "broken heart syndrome". Christiane Waller explains why the hormone oxytocin can play a protective role here.

Freediver Anna Karina Schmitt shows how to combat stress with breathing. She uses specific exercises to prepare her heart for dives to depths of up to 80 meters - using just one breath.

Of Caravan and the Dogs - Russia's Journalists and Their Fight for Press Freedom

Behind the scenes at Russian independent media and NGOs during the war in Ukraine. As the Putin government further escalates its suppression of free voices, newspaper Novaya Gazeta, radio station Echo of Moscow and Rain TV try to find ways to continue their work.
"The dogs bark, but the caravan moves on." Dmitry Muratov, editor-in-chief of the newspaper Novaya Gazeta and Nobel Peace Prize laureate, reinterprets this saying: In his view, the "barking" dogs represent independent media as an antidote to the tyranny of the governmental caravan. Muratov asks: "Is it possible to continue working under military censorship?"

This film accompanies Russian journalists in their fight for freedom of the press. Since the Russian invasion of Ukraine, the teams at Novaya Gazeta, Echo of Moscow and Rain TV have been opposing state propaganda, even as free speech and independent journalism are rapidly being suppressed. Roskomnadzor — the federal agency responsible for monitoring the media — has issued an order that the media should only use official Russian sources. It also banned people from calling "the special operation in Ukraine" an attack, an invasion or a war. Soon thereafter, Russian parliament adopted a law imposing heavy prison sentences for "spreading false information" about the Russian military in Ukraine.

Of Caravan and the Dogs takes us behind the scenes at Novaya Gazeta, Echo of Moscow and Rain TV. These committed and courageous journalists live with the tension between their conscience and their safety. We also follow the fate of Memorial, the NGO that documents atrocities commitred during Stalin's reign. A shutdown looms over all of them. Will they be able to go on?

The Magic of Colors

Colors make our homes more beautiful. They make our clothes more stylish. And colors are indispensable for art. But what looks beautiful can also be toxic: Many colors contain substances like mercury, lead, or chromium. The production of colors pollutes soil and water. Toxins can get onto our skin via our clothing. Textile dyeing has a particularly devastating impact in Asia. In countries like Bangladesh, China, and India, wastewater is often discharged into rivers without being filtered. "Basically, the textile industry dumps all its waste into the river," says biologist Jim Ajioka.

Along with his colleague Orr Yarkoni, Jim Ajioka has founded a start-up in Cambridge, England. Their aim is to revolutionize the textile market. "Our vision is to completely eliminate the use of toxic chemicals," he says. To achieve this, the visionaries are relying on biological processes and microbes that can dye fabrics.

Paints made from natural raw materials such as stones and minerals: that's David Kremer's specialty. At his paint mill in Aichstetten in the Allgäu region, he produces paints according to traditional methods and rediscovers long-forgotten shades. Renowned museums such as the Louvre in Paris and the Prado in Madrid use his paints for the restoration of paintings. Many artists also find very special and rare tones in his collection.

A new project is taking David Kremer to Greece. There, he's searching for a mine for a mineral that was used to produce color pigments in ancient times.

In the Netherlands, Jeanet Marit Herbst knows that colors can even be beneficial to health. The color expert is redesigning the interiors of large clinics in Germany, the Netherlands, and other European countries. Her work shows that colors can lower blood pressure, lift a person's mood, and help reduce medication use. "Color does everything," says Herbst. "It heals, supports, and provides stability."

Back to the Bunker? - The Eternal Fear of War

Time spent hiding in bunkers shapes people for the rest of their lives. This film examines a span from World War II to the Cold War to the current threats that are forcing many people into shelters again today.
The documentary "Back to the Bunker?" uses personal accounts from eyewitnesses to look at traumatic bunker experiences -- both today, and during the world wars of the last century. The film examines empty bunker ruins at the turn of the millennium, and the current bunker renaissance in Germany and Europe.
This film focuses on the impact of bunkers on humans. Eyewitnesses, experts, and representatives of the younger generation talk about fear, and the need for security in a changing world. The film looks back on the eventful history of these concrete monsters and asks what they mean to people—then, and now.
Journalist and teacher Karina Beigelzimer and her students talk about what it feels like to seek shelter in an air-raid shelter in Ukraine. How does this experience shape everyday lives?
Henry Foner first arrived in Wales during the Second World War on a "Kindertransport" and remembers seeking refuge in an air-raid shelter there. Now, he's reliving this experience in Israel, along with his granddaughter Mor Atsmon.
Robert Seidenader talks to his granddaughter Laura Seidenader about his time in the Munich bunker at Nockherberg during the Second World War.
Eyewitness Marione Ingram, a Jewish woman, was turned away from a bunker during the Nazi era and had to endure bombing raids without protection.
Konrad Velten, himself an eyewitness of the Second World War, and his granddaughter Sophie Hildner connect that experience to the present day, offering guided tours of a bunker in Baden-Baden.
Experts Heide Glaesmer, a psychologist who researches war trauma, Marc Buggeln, a historian and bunker expert, and Martin Voss, a disaster researcher and sociologist, contextualize the events and experiences of the protagonists. An impressive documentary about the culture of remembrance and resilience, as well as the social question of how people deal with extreme situations.

I am fine but

A year spent as a volunteer in Berlin. For Angeli from Cameroon, this is the first big trip of his life. How does voluntary service in another country shape a young person?
Anyone in Germany can apply for what's known as the 'Federal Voluntary Service'. It's a program enabling Germans to volunteer anywhere in the world. Foreigners can also come to Germany. In 2019, the young Cameroonian Robincrusoe Angeli comes to Berlin as part of the same program.
With a small monthly allowance, Angeli does his best to get by. He works with the Grüne Liga, an environmental movement. But it's not always easy, in a city like Berlin. Making friends is difficult, and he's plagued by homesickness. The documentary sensitively examines how voluntary service affects Angeli. What is he learning about Germany, and what are Germans learning from him?
This is a film about falling down and getting back up, good intentions, and how we interact with one another.

Spiked - The Insidious Use of Knockout Drops

Knockout drops: colorless, tasteless and extremely dangerous. They've been around for decades and are used to incapacitate people in order to rob, rape and even kill them.
"Spiking" is adding a sedative substance to people's food and drink without their knowledge or consent. The victim is rendered completely helpless and often suffers memory blackout - and crimes go unreported. "I didn't know why, but I knew something bad had happened," says Kate, recalling the night she was "knocked out". The following day, she realized she had been raped.
Lawyer Jochen Link from the German organization Weißer Ring, which supports victims of crime, warns that the extent of the problem is being underestimated. Time and again, victims report blackouts even though they have consumed very little alcohol.
The range of substances used is wide - from party drugs to sedatives and sleeping pills. Many victims feel ashamed or afraid that they won't be taken seriously. Nina, who reported a rape, describes it this way: "Right from the start, I felt I wouldn't be believed." Despite evidence being found, her case never went to trial.
Detection remains extremely difficult, partly because once ingested, many substances are quickly broken down by the body. Researchers at Charité University Hospital in Berlin are therefore investigating the substances most found in spiking cases. What all documented cases have in common is the experience of loss of control. "The memory gaps are hard to bear," explains one expert - especially when those affected have experienced sexual violence. Victims' lawyer Link also calls for more than just tougher penalties: "We as a society need to work on this. And not just politicians, but all of us."

The Lure of St. Moritz - Luxury, Snow and Winter Sports

St. Moritz is the birthplace of alpine winter tourism, as well of many winter sports. The village, with its magnificent location in the Swiss Engadin mountains, was already attracting celebrities in the last century.
St. Moritz is one of the most exclusive winter sports resorts in the world, with a burnished history. Located in the picturesque Swiss Engadin mountains, the village attracted many celebrities in the last century: including Charlie Chaplin, Audrey Hepburn, Brigitte Bardot, Gunter Sachs, Andy Warhol and Herbert von Karajan. Coco Chanel sought refuge here, during the war. Alfred Hitchcock was inspired to write his first classic in one of St. Moritz's grand hotels, and returned many times over the decades. The Shah of Persia temporarily ruled his empire from a chalet on the Suvretta slope.
Just 150 years ago, St. Moritz was still a simple mountain village. Then adventurous Englishmen arrived, invented new winter sports and laid the foundation for the town's fame. Five-star hotels sprang up in the village of 5,000 inhabitants, which suddenly became a winter hotspot for the rich and famous.
Numerous winter sports originated here, some of which are unique to this location: in Cresta, participants race headfirst down into the valley on low sleds - on the longest natural ice track in the world.
The Cresta Club, founded over 100 years ago by Englishmen, is still one of the most exclusive clubs in the world. In skijoring, skiers are pulled across the frozen Lake St. Moritz by horses. Winter sports, tradition and sophisticated lifestyle, luxury and cosmopolitanism characterize the history of St. Moritz.

Tunesia - The Betrayed Revolution

The Jasmin Revolution took place in Tunisia in 2010. In 2024, President Kais Saied was re-elected by a large majority. In 2019, he was still seen as a man of integrity and loyal to the constitution. Today, Saied’s ruling style is autocratic.
In December 2010, the self-immolation of Tunisian street vendor Mohamed Bouazizi sparked what became known as the Jasmine Revolution. The spark spread throughout the region and became the starting point of the Arab Spring. With the flight of Tunisian ruler Ben Ali in January 2011, a decade of hope began: free elections, an internationally praised constitution and political pluralism that was exceptional for the region.
But the democratic experiment faltered. Islamist influence, political infighting and an ever-deepening economic crisis caused the initial euphoria to fade. Disappointed young people took to the streets once again, chanting "bread, freedom and national dignity". In this politically torn country, a reserved professor of constitutional law entered the scene: Kais Saied. His demonstrative independence from the political establishment and his supposed loyalty to the ideals of the revolution made him a beacon of hope for many.
But after Saied's surprise election in 2019 and his overwhelming re-election in 2024, things took a drastic turn. Saied concentrated power in his own hands, brought the judiciary into line, marginalized the opposition and restricted press freedom. Step by step, he undermined Tunisia's young democracy - while the international community focused primarily on protecting Europe's external borders and barely reacted.
The documentary hears from witnesses and airs previously unpublished archive material to paint a vivid picture of political change: from the enthusiasm of the revolutionary years to the authoritarian developments that, 15 years later, appear to be a definitive betrayal of the hopes of the Arab Spring.

Urban Foraging - Fresh, Tasty and Free

More and more city dwellers are collecting food in the asphalt jungle. They harvest herbs by the roadside and grow wild vegetables in cracks in the concrete. For these modern foragers and hunters, the food is free, tasty and more varied than in the supermarket.
Christian Amys is an urban foraging professional. He forages for fresh food in his hometown of Brighton. For him, the English coastal city is an urban Garden of Eden. Christian finds wild vegetables and herbs in places where most people would never expect to find food. The 42-year-old only spends a few pounds a week on food from the supermarket: "I want to be independent and don't like to rely on the supermarket. I like to forage on my doorstep because it's nice to know where my food comes from."
Christian Amys worked as a top chef for 20 years before becoming an urban forager. Today, he shows others where to find wild fennel, hogweed, pineapple weed and dandelion heads and how to use them in food preparation. Christian now even supplies top restaurants and cocktail bars with his wild delicacies.
Alexis Goertz also looks for her food on the roadside and in parks. The Canadian has lived in Berlin for over 10 years. She preserves what she collects using the centuries-old technique of fermentation. Whether it's evening primrose capers, wild garlic kimchi or goutweed sauerkraut - for Alexis, fermentation is about more than just preservation: "Above all, fermentation makes food tastier and easier to digest. And I've just become addicted to it."
Alexis regularly invites people to join her on urban herb walks and explains what’s edible - and what’s poisonous. The 33-year-old is all about rediscovering nature in the city: "Berlin is fantastic for foraging for food. The diversity is immense. Not just among the people, but also in nature."

We Won’t Fight in Vietnam! - US Students and Their Anti-Conscription Protest

The documentary tells the story of American conscientious objectors. The fates of those courageous young Americans who refused to serve in the Vietnam War have been little-documented, until now.
Their non-violent actions - from burning their draft cards to consciously accepting prison sentences of several years - became a decisive driving force behind the anti-war movement. Their resistance contributed significantly to the abolition of conscription and thus increased the political pressure that ultimately led to the end of the Vietnam War.

The film portrays prominent figures such as Martin Luther King Jr. and Muhammad Ali, who took a public stand despite massive criticism, as well as the founder of the resistance movement, David Harris, whose commitment continued even during his imprisonment. Their stories are complemented by numerous voices of lesser-known conscientious objectors, whose personal stories reveal the breadth and determination of the movement.

With rare archival footage, powerful interviews and historical depth, the film shows a youth-led movement that placed moral conviction above obedience to the state. "We Won’t Fight in Vietnam!" not only sheds light on a key chapter in American history, but also points to the continuing importance of non-violent protest in today's social and political movements.

Oumuamua - Mysterious Messenger From Another Star

Where does Oumuamua, the mysterious interstellar flying object discovered in 2017, come from? Astronomer Robert Weryk spotted it with the help of the Pan-STARRS telescope in Hawaii. But what is Oumuamua? A comet? An artificial object?
Many questions and myths surrounded this "thing from another world". Since it was too fast to be attracted by the gravitational pull of the sun, it was clear that it came from another star system. But what exactly was Oumuamua, which means "a messenger from afar arriving first," in Hawaiian? An asteroid? A comet? A fragment of an exoplanet, that is, a planet outside our solar system? Or even an active space probe, as Avi Loeb, director of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, has speculated?

Spiked - Life After an Attack

Knockout drops: colorless, tasteless and extremely dangerous. They've been around for decades and are used to incapacitate people in order to rob, rape and even kill them.
"Spiking" is adding a sedative substance to people's food and drink without their knowledge or consent. The victim is rendered completely helpless and often suffers memory blackout - and crimes go unreported. "I didn't know why, but I knew something bad had happened," says Kate, recalling the night she was "knocked out". The following day, she realized she had been raped.
Lawyer Jochen Link from the German organization Weißer Ring, which supports victims of crime, warns that the extent of the problem is being underestimated. Time and again, victims report blackouts even though they have consumed very little alcohol.
The range of substances used is wide - from party drugs to sedatives and sleeping pills. Many victims feel ashamed or afraid that they won't be taken seriously. Nina, who reported a rape, describes it this way: "Right from the start, I felt I wouldn't be believed." Despite evidence being found, her case never went to trial.
Detection remains extremely difficult, partly because once ingested, many substances are quickly broken down by the body. Researchers at Charité University Hospital in Berlin are therefore investigating the substances most found in spiking cases. What all documented cases have in common is the experience of loss of control. "The memory gaps are hard to bear," explains one expert - especially when those affected have experienced sexual violence. Victims' lawyer Link also calls for more than just tougher penalties: "We as a society need to work on this. And not just politicians, but all of us."

Italy’s New Farmers

Astonishing new data from the Italian farmers' association: More and more young people are moving away from cities to rural areas in order to work in farming. For many, it’s an active choice to change career.
The association says the number of young farmers in Italy has risen by 13 per cent over the last 10 years, more than anywhere else in Europe. One of these new farmers is the young Roman Giacomo Lepri. After graduating with a degree in ethnology, like many young Italians he struggled to find a job. Instead of going abroad, he founded the Cooperativa Agricola Coraggio. Now, he is fighting to have unused public land in the city of Rome allocated to young farmers. He hopes to join forces with like-minded people to organically farm the abandoned Borghetto San Carlo estate.
Rome has been Italy's largest owner of agricultural land since antiquity. Giacomo Leprì's campaign is aimed at changing urban policy, so that the capital's agricultural heritage can be tapped to create jobs for young farmers. In the steep hills around the city of Genoa there’s also plenty of agricultural land -abandoned because cultivating it is a challenge. When Davide Moro and Matteo Rizzitano decide to quit their jobs at a car body repair shop, finding land to farm wasn’t a problem. Nevertheless, the path for these new young farmers in Rome and Genoa has been strewn with obstacles. Despite EU goals to promote urgently-needed generational change in agriculture, securing long-term financial resources is difficult for small businesses like these.
Still, the two men say there’s no chance they’re giving up. The career changers aren’t just motivated by Italy’s high youth jobless rate, but also by a desire for self-determined work close to nature.

Beijing Spring - The Democracy Wall Movement in China

Mao's death was followed by a very short period of freedom of expression in China. Known as the "Beijing Spring", it was part of the new head of state Deng Xiaoping’s desire to distance himself from the mistakes of the Cultural Revolution.
A brick wall near Tiananmen Square in Beijing briefly became the site of a democracy movement after Mao's death in 1976. People travelled from all over China to put up posters on this "Democracy Wall". They demanded accountability for the tens of thousands of people murdered and imprisoned during Mao's Cultural Revolution.

At the same time, a group of former factory workers founded the art group "Stars" - among them, the young Ai Weiwei. They exhibited critical works on the wall, including abstract paintings and sculptures in which they settled accounts with the Cultural Revolution. Wei Jingsheng was arrested for publishing an essay in which he called Deng Xiaoping a dictator. He was sentenced to 15 years in prison. The members of the artists' group Stars, however, succeeded in recording the secret trial on tape. They published the trial‘s transcript on the Wall of Democracy, garnering worldwide attention: even the New York Times reported on it.

When the traditional National Day military parade was canceled because the country was still officially mourning Mao's death, the Stars art collective decided to organize a parade on their own. They bid goodbye to their families and friends, as they risked their lives to fight for freedom of expression and art. Deng Xiaoping used violence against the protesters and increased censorship. The Wall of Democracy was abolished, and many of the activists and artists were sentenced to prison or forced into exile. It was the end of the "Beijing Spring".

Filmmaker Chi Xiaoning documented this period of revolt on 16mm film. When he was arrested, he managed to save the material by destroying blank film reels in front of the police instead of the originals. Chi's family and friends hid the footage for decades. In this documentary, the footage is shown publicly for the first time.

Table Mountain’s Magic Tablecloth - Cape Town’s Life-Giving Cloud

In Cape Town, South Africa, a remarkable cloud phenomenon sometimes crowns Table Mountain. Known as the "tablecloth," this misty blanket spills over the flat summit to drape itself over the cliffs, ocean and city below.
The mist that forms here plays a vital role in the region's climate. The tablecloth regulates the temperature, feeding groundwater and rivers. It helps sustain the remarkable biodiversity of the "fynbos" — a unique ecosystem of endemic plants and animals. Humans have lived here for thousands of years. They've cultivated the land, drawing both water and meaning from this extraordinary cloud. First here were the Khoisan, later Dutch settlers. Today, a multi-ethnic community has sprung up in the mountain's shade.
The tablecloth also protects the region's celebrated vineyards. It helps maintain the delicate balance between city life, agriculture and nature — but that balance is facing growing challenges. Drought, population growth, invasive species, water shortages and climate change all threaten this fragile system. Now, scientists are studying that web of connection, looking for ways to restore balance .
Alongside that work, residents are learning to conserve resources and protect biodiversity. They're rediscovering the mountain's value in their daily lives.
The city began waking up to the situation when a the devastating "Day Zero” water crisis hit. Communities began rethinking their water use, developing new strategies to help humans and nature share a thriving relationship. High above it all, the tablecloth continues to drift across Table Mountain — a powerful reminder of the deep connection between our modern societies and an ever-shifting natural world.

Kiruna - A City Relocates

A church that "migrates" to a new location kilometers away. A key event in the relocation of the northern Swedish city of Kiruna. As iron ore mining encroaches on its territory, large parts of the city are being forced to make way.
Many buildings are being demolished, and the city center now consists largely of new construction. Leaving many residents of Kiruna unhappy.
For several years now, Stefan Holmblad Johansson has been preparing for the day the church must leave its longtime home. He's responsible for the relocation of the house of worship at the mining company LKAB. But he also has a personal connection to the church, like many people here in Kiruna. A few years ago, the Swedes voted the church the most beautiful building in the whole country. Its relocation was staged as a media-friendly folk festival.
But for many people, the move is no cause for celebration. Lina Brännström grew up near the old city center. Today, she avoids going there. Most of the remaining buildings stand empty, and many others have already been demolished. "We were given so many promises, so many fine words - but in the end, all that's left is rubble," she says angrily. One of her chief concerns is the music association "Tusen toner" (A Thousand Tones), an institution in Kiruna. For 30 years, it has been housed in a listed building which, unlike the church, will apparently not be relocated. There is no replacement. Lina and her friends see no future for alternative youth culture in the city.
Miner Jari Söyrinki is also unhappy. For a long time, Kiruna and the LKAB mine have been dependent on each other in a positive sense. But now, it's clear that mining operations are taking priority over everything else. Kiruna is in danger of becoming a backdrop, rather than a real home for its residents.

AI - Death of the internet?

The internet is being flooded with AI-generated garbage. Disinformation, propaganda, a flood of synthetic images and sounds. Will we soon only be getting information that AI feeds us?
While we are still pondering the possible social implications of artificial intelligence, the digital knowledge space is already drowning in synthetic trash. Automated bots are producing a flood of AI-generated content that threatens to suffocate the internet. How did it come to this? After all, it was not so long ago that the web was considered a place of free knowledge, designed for the open exchange of information and entertainment. How did it become a dumping ground for machine-generated nonsense, so quickly?
During his journey of discovery through the dying web, filmmaker Mario Sixtus encounters search engines that are losing their bearings and, out of helplessness, have begun working on their own demise. He demonstrates how one or two command sets typed into AI software are enough to produce meaningless self-help books and news videos consisting of pure nonsense. Will we soon be fed only AI-hallucinated fake information when we try to do our own research? The documentary takes a cinematic journey through the flood of online garbage, meets a podcaster in New York who has cloned himself with AI, encounters an underpaid click worker in Kenya who trains AI — and, along with internet experts like Cory Doctorow, Melanie Mitchell and Mats Schönauer, strains for a glimpse of a new, sustainable internet.

European Narcos - Part 1 - The Wealth of a Nation

For centuries, Dutch prosperity has been based on global trade. But this has always had a dark side. Drugs, like opium and cocaine, are traded too.
The first part of this documentary shows how the Netherlands became the European hub for narcotics.
As early as the 17th century, Dutch colonialism laid the foundation for a lucrative drug trade. Opium from Indonesia financed the rise of the trading empire. This was followed by the cultivation of coca plants on Java - which formed the basis for Amsterdam's early cocaine production. Even when international bans officially ended the trade during World War I, the system survived, underground. In the interwar period, an illegal market emerged and continues to have an impact today.
After the Second World War, drug trafficking initially seemed to be a thing of the past. But the 1960s brought radical change: with the rise of counterculture, demand grew for hashish from Morocco and heroin from the Indian subcontinent. The Netherlands responded with a unique strategy - the separation of so-called hard and soft drugs. Coffee shops were aimed at regulating consumption. But criminal structures became entrenched. Figures such as Klaas Bruinsma, the "Dutch Al Capone," became powerful drug lords. In the 1990s, the country became the epicenter of synthetic drugs: ecstasy pills flooded Europe, and the profits flowed into real estate and the real economy. When the old underworld generation disappeared, young criminals from working-class neighborhoods took over. Their focus was on cocaine, the ‘new’ profitable drug. The documentary shows how colonial trade routes gave rise to a modern network that continues to shape Europe's drug market to this day.

Searching for Clues - Donations for Islamist Terrorism?

Islamist terrorism continues to claim numerous victims worldwide. Extremist networks are financed in part by donations from Germany. But investigations often prove to be difficult.
Money from Germany repeatedly finds its way into structures that support Islamist terror. This occurs via bank transfers, donation associations, online payment services, and even cryptocurrencies. Many small amounts can add up to large sums. Such cash flows often go unnoticed because investigations in Germany - unlike in some other countries - often fail due to legal hurdles.
The documentary follows the money trail from Germany to Syria. It tells the story of a young German woman who returns home after a time spent with the Islamic State terror group. She provides insights into how money is collected, transferred, and used. The film reconstructs how money is collected via middlemen in Germany and Austria - including funding for Hamas.
At the same time, the team of authors explores why German authorities are so oblivious to this, and why investigators in other countries are apparently more successful when it comes to putting a stop to the flow of finances to extremists.
An investigative search with exclusive discoveries and impressive interviews, this film makes clear how close the issue of terrorist financing is to our everyday lives - and that even small donations can have deadly consequences.

The Sushi Hype - Lifestyle Trend With a Dark Side

Sushi: Once an expensive gourmet food, now a global fast-food phenomenon. Whether you get it from an Asian snack bar or a supermarket to-go box, sushi is trendy. It’s low in calories, healthy, and affordable. But sushi consumption also brings problems.
This documentary is a journalistic investigation into the supply chains of salmon and tuna, the two most popular sushi ingredients. The film takes us on a journey from contested tuna fishing grounds in the Indian Ocean to huge salmon farms in Northern Europe, as well as to the gigantic factories of the fishing industry.
Near Gdansk, for example, some 115,000 sushi boxes are produced every day. That adds up to around 23 tons of ready-made sushi, some of which is destined for German supermarkets.
Yellowfin tuna, which is particularly popular for sushi, is now threatened with extinction. Fisheries expert Philipp Kanstinger from the nature conservation organization WWF therefore advises critical consumption, because: "Truly sustainable yellowfin tuna is virtually non-existent.” Overfishing through aggressive fishing methods, factory farming and modern slave labor are all part of the dark side of the great sushi craze.

On Tram Tracks Through Wrocław - A City in Transition

The best way to appreciate Wrocław is from tram line No. 1. It has been rolling through the city for 140 years - passing rubble, after the war, and past renovated facades, modern apartment blocks and the grassy banks of the River Oder, today.
This film accompanies tram driver Tatjana Granowska on her daily journey through Wrocław, and features talks with people along tram line No. 1 - students, artists and other residents of this city on the Oder. They talk about their everyday lives and how this city in the heart of Europe is changing.

Tatjana Granowska worked in a travel agency for many years, helping others to discover the world. When that ended, the native Kazakh decided to make a fresh start and became a tram driver. Today, she steers the tram through the city -- and can't imagine a better job.

Kamil Zaremba lost everything in the 1997 floods. Today, he lives on a houseboat on the Oder River. While many in the city fear the next big flood, he feels safe on the water. His floating home is also an inexpensive alternative, in a property market characterized by rising rents. His second houseboat, which is also his life's work, is moored next door: the "Odra Centrum" is an educational and cultural center attracting many young people.

Trained locksmith Zenon Dębowski was unemployed for a long time. Through the art project "The Colorful Courtyards" in the Nadodrze district, he found stability and community.

Wrocław is Poland's third-largest city. "On Tram Tracks Through Wrocław - A City in Transition" is a cinematic invitation to discover the Lower Silesian metropolis - through the windows of a tram that's been telling stories for 140 years.

Young and Lonely - Ways Out of Isolation

Loneliness is often underestimated - especially among young people. The documentary follows four young people: Ellen, Gordon, Lilli and Vanelynn, who feel isolated for very different reasons.
Ellen moves to Freiburg as a student and doesn't know many people there yet. Another person affected is 19-year-old Lilli, who often feels alone in Cottbus in Brandenburg with her left-wing values. Then there's influencer Vanelynn from Düsseldorf. Although she's constantly online, she misses having real-life contacts. The last protagonist is Gordon from Stuttgart, who lives with depression. The four of them speak about their struggles and hopes, which the film records with openness and sensitivity.

European Narcos - Part 2: The Weakness of States

In Rotterdam, local street gangs join forces with Colombians to build their empire. Driven by raging demand, the cocaine trade has triggered an unprecedented wave of violence.
The second part of this documentary begins in Europe, in the 2000s. It traces the rise of major criminals who came to the Netherlands as immigrants. These include Gwenette Martha and Ridouan Taghi, who became the main contacts for South American cocaine dealers. To defend the bosses' interests, their organization practiced unprecedented violence. Murders of lawyers and journalists, acts of retaliation with military weapons, and threats against the royal family shook the country.
Some surviving drug dealers ended up in Dubai, the trading paradise of the Middle East. From here, they continued their business via encrypted communication platforms. When police authorities succeeded in cracking down on these platforms in 2020, they thought they had found the Holy Grail: thousands of drug dealers were arrested, record amounts of weapons, cash, and drugs were seized, and countless henchmen who had been secretly laundering money were identified.
But the criminal gangs reorganized in no time at all—and became even more agile and mobile than before. Further proof of the criminals' resilience and procurement capabilities was the price of a gram of cocaine - which remained stable through it all. In the mid-2020s, judges, police forces, and European customs officials agreed on one thing: drug trafficking poses the greatest threat to Europe's internal security.

Our Memory - A Phenomenal Storage System

Our memory is a machine of superlatives. Every second, it processes unimaginable amounts of information, decides what's important and what's not, and stores what we experience and learn.
Our memory also makes us who we are. The experiences and feelings we've stored, the knowledge we've retained - all of this connects us to ourselves and our past. But how can we improve our memory and make it more efficient? How can we keep it fit and healthy? What happens when it fails us?

This documentary follows people who are connected in different ways to the topic of "memory". In her late 40s, Nicole Adam lost her memory after suffering several strokes. She's determined to regain it - with occupational therapy and VR glasses. On her road to recovery, she also asks herself the question: Who am I if I don't know who I used to be? As her story shows, our memory is both vulnerable and adaptable.

For actor Henriette Hölzel, on the other hand, learning large amounts of text for roles at the Dresden State Theatre is part of everyday life. She has eight different roles at her fingertips at the same time. She reveals how she manages to keep complex dialogues in her head. Johannes Mallow, multiple German champion and two-time world champion in memory sports, also explains how he streamlines the process of information recollection. Using methods such as the "mind palace", he takes us to Magdeburg Cathedral to show how he memorizes his appointments so that he never forgets them.

But it's not just training that keeps our memory fit. In fact, forgetting is also important for keeping our memory healthy. Neuroscientist Andreas Papassotiropoulos explains that forgetting is an active process that helps us distinguish between what's important - and what's not. To benefit our memory, he recommends sleep and exercise as well as art and culture. Heidelberg neurobiologist Prof. Hannah Monyer makes it clear that our memories have not only shaped our past, but also shape our future: what we remember today influences who we will be tomorrow.

A film that tells stories of learning and forgetting, presents exciting research findings and shows how we can strengthen our memory so that it stays with us throughout our lives.

India - Economic Miracle or Mirage?

India has set its sights on becoming an economic global power. For western entrepreneurs, the country could be a feasible alternative to China. But how sustainable is the current boom?
"We're a nuclear power, a space power. But India also wants to be an economic power," says a former Indian ambassador. The key growth indicators point to robust expansion. Business leaders and billionaires in India are in high spirits. With a huge government stimulus program for infrastructure, Prime Minister Narendra Modi wants to turn his vision into reality and make India's economy competitive.

In November, the government's National Infrastructure Pipeline program had a total value of around 1.4 trillion dollars. According to the economic development agency Germany Trade & Invest, this included around 9,000 individual projects. Modi also wants to attract foreign investors and increase infrastructure spending by 11 per cent. According to Germany Trade & Invest, 134 billion US dollars were earmarked for 2024/2025.

In the current geopolitical situation, India appears to be an interesting economic partner for the West, offering a possible alternative to China. However, critical voices raise doubts. Economists both inside and outside the country point to devastating inequality and poor education. The country is also struggling to create sufficient jobs for the millions of young people entering its workforce every year.

The documentary hears from both sides, provides an overview of the situation, and leaves room for both euphoria and criticism. The film also explores the questions: Is India now ready to free itself from the shackles of its long colonial history and become a reliable partner for the West?

The Condor Still Flies - The Long Shadow of Paraguay's Military Dictatorship

Latin America has long been one of the most dangerous regions for human rights and environmental activists. Hundreds of people are murdered every year, in crimes that have a sad tradition on the continent.
Some are linked to the anti-communist repression of the 1970s, as shown in the film "The Condor Still Flies." Back then, with the support of the United States, political opponents of right-wing dictatorships were kidnapped, tortured and murdered - part of a campaign called Operation Condor.

Today, economic power in Latin America lies with multinational corporations, including those in the soy industry. Their enemies are indigenous peoples and landless farmers who demand the right to land and are therefore persecuted and criminalized as terrorists or killed by hired assassins.

In 2024, 80 per cent of all murders of environmental activists recorded worldwide took place in Latin America. According to recent reports by the international NGO Global Witness, the region remains the most dangerous in the world for human rights and environmental activists.

Director Anna Recalde Miranda searches for the roots of this violent conflict. Her journey between the past and the present sheds light on the origins of today's ecological disaster and the violent oppression of indigenous peoples and activists. The tactics in this conflict may differ from those of 50 years ago, but the structures are the same: landowners and multinational corporations secure their interests with the help of the police and army. The shadow of the condor still hovers over the Latin American continent.

Last Refuge from Deportation - Church Asylum Under Scrutiny

For more than 40 years, German churches have been offering refugees church asylum. But this is not a legal right. And the practice is increasingly being called into question by German authorities.
As the country’s previously welcoming refugee policy undergoes major change, the state's tolerance for church asylum is waning.

Anja is someone who has felt this shift. A pastor in a free church, she grants church asylum to people in her congregation who are threatened with deportation. How does she handle the difficult balancing act between extending charity, and obedience to the law?

The state of Bremen is considered a stronghold of church asylum: of almost 2,400 cases nationwide, 200 were registered here in 2024. Ironically, it was here in this liberal Hanseatic city that a scandal erupted during Advent last year: the Bremen Migration Office instructed police officers to remove a 25-year-old Somali man from church asylum for deportation to Finland, his first point of entry into the EU.

But a chain of protesters prevented officers from entering the Bremen Zion Community Center. The consequences of the failed deportation: public controversy, unsettled communities, disgruntled church leaders, and angry authorities.

The film shows what church asylum means in concrete terms, through the stories of people currently living in church asylum, as well as those protected by the church in the past who remain closely connected to the community to this day.

Pastor Anja’s work also involves interaction with the authorities. As well as the practical questions of everyday life, from food to language lessons. After all, it takes an enormous effort for a community to accommodate, feed, and care for people for months on end.
