Waiting for Zorro

The parents of people living with disabilities are often left to cope alone. Care from support services is scarce, waiting lists are long. When tensions run high, some families need a hero to come to the rescue.

The film follows families that include children or young adults living with autism - and shows the enormous strain daily struggles can place upon their relationships. Things can grow especially difficult when relatives are no longer able to understand a loved one's behavior. It can become near impossible for them to cope on their own.

The families in this documentary are supported by Lucas - an education specialist who focuses on autism. He visits them in their homes, working with each family to develop ways to defuse difficult situations and make daily life more manageable.

The film shines a light on a reality that often goes unseen. It tells stories of the complex challenges in everyday lives, the lack of support and the difference reliable help at the right moment can make.

Director Sarah Moon Howe - herself the mother of a son living with autism - is an advocate for increased visibility of these issues.

01:15 DocFilmThe Fichtelberg Sell-Off - Balancing Tradition and Business

The Fichtelberg is a place where winter sports traditions, East German history and economic interests converge. Saxony's highest peak is an Ore Mountains landmark and the focus of a debate over the region's future.

At 1,215 meters, the Fichtelberg is the highest mountain in Saxony and eastern Germany: A tourist magnet and home to the Fichtelberg cable car, itself more than a century old. At its foot lies Oberwiesenthal, Germany's highest town. The place where the career of ski jumper and three-time Olympic champion Jens Weißflog first took off.

With the sale of the Fichtelberg plateau, the Fichtelbergerhaus, the ski lifts and the cable car to the entrepreneur Rainer Gläß, a new chapter has begun in the mountain's history. Before he made his name as an IT entrepreneur, Gläß was a competitive athlete and ski instructor in Oberwiesenthal. The investor has loved the region since childhood and for some, he's the right man to execute a much-needed modernization. But for others, the sell-off represents an irresponsible privatization of public assets.

The film explores the mountain's role as a winter sports center, a place of remembrance and an economic lifeline, as well as exploring the traces of its GDR past. At the same time, it turns its attention to the future: who should decide on the development of this special place? And how can winter sports hold their own in the face of climate change?

01:15 DocFilmMy Body, My Skin

Our skin connects us to the world while also providing us with a boundary and a layer of protection. It's a biotope, an object of desire, and it allows us to smell the way we do. How can we keep our skin healthy, and heal it when it's unwell?

On average, the skin is around two square meters in area and weighs between five and ten kilograms. For a long time, it was viewed primarily as a covering. But this multitasking organ is much more than that. It provides us with one of our senses, it can draw oxygen directly from the air, and it can even perceive sound waves and odor molecules.

The skin is also a status symbol, with smooth, wrinkle-free skin symbolizing youth, beauty and success. Countless experts offer advice, including recommending anti-aging products containing acids, bases, enzymes, vitamins, or proteins. But only a few cosmetics are truly worth it, says dermatologist Professor Claudia Borelli of the University Hospital in Tübingen, Germany. The same goes for the advice of many skincare influencers, who often promote their own interests on social media. So is it better to think twice before rushing to get cosmetic treatments?

Over the past five years, procedures using Botox and hyaluronic acid have more than doubled. Borelli warns that poorly administered fillers can cause problems for years to come. Nevertheless, the clients of cosmetic doctors are getting younger and younger. Gaming streamer Jasmin Gnu had lip fillers in her early 20s — she now regrets that decision. She tells her fans that they don't have to chase the unattainable aesthetic ideals sold to them by the beauty filters used on social media.

Meanwhile, the skin can also be seen as a window into the soul. Stress can make the skin sick, says psychodermatologist Professor Uwe Gieler. About a quarter of Germans suffer from skin conditions such as atopic dermatitis, psoriasis, acne, or allergies. With the help of an anti-inflammatory diet, new medications and therapy, there's a good chance of healing unhealthy skin.

01:15 DocFilmBad Banker - Confessions of a Money Launderer

Criminals have one big problem: They deal with money — dirty money that first needs to get clean. That's where money launderers come in. The police are always hot on their trail.

Money laundering is a lucrative business — for the launderers and for their clients. You can't just deposit money from drug dealing, for instance, into any bank account. But there are ways to make what's known as dirty money usable again. Laundering allows money from illicit activities to be funneled back into the legitimate economy. Among other methods, it can be done through shell companies, real estate purchases or cryptocurrency transactions.

Money launderers find ways to make criminal proceeds appear clean: The money is invested, deposited and withdrawn again. It's all illegal, of course. Not least because no taxes get paid. Money launderers also face risks — money is not allowed to be lost. Anyone thinking they can pocket someone else's money can pay a high price — sometimes even with their life.

It's estimated that 2% to 5% of global gross domestic product is laundered — amounting to trillions of euros worldwide every year. The damage that causes to governments and society can only be guessed at: Experts believe billions of euros are likely being defrauded.

In most countries, money laundering is a criminal offense. Germany has a money laundering act that governs their prevention work. Banks, insurers, real estate agents, attorneys, notaries and providers of cryptocurrency services are all required to report suspicious transactions. At the same time, criminals work to exploit differences between national regulatory and oversight systems. The European Union has established the Anti-Money Laundering Authority (AMLA) to coordinate European efforts to combat money laundering. The new agency will operate across borders and strengthen cooperation among national authorities.

In the Name of Jesus - Brazil - The Power of the Evangelicals

Brazil's evangelicals have become a powerful political force. Their support helped elect Jair Bolsonaro in 2018. This film reveals how they operate. With around 70 million followers, Brazil's evangelicals account for nearly one-third of voters. Within 50 years they have grown to become one of the country's most influential political movements. They assert power through thousands of churches, major media empires and hundreds of politicians who champion their agenda. In the 2026 presidential election, they backed Flávio Bolsonaro, son of former President Jair Bolsonaro.

Jair Bolsonaro won the 2018 election with the support of around 70 percent of evangelicals. His political legacy remains controversial. After being convicted of attempting a coup, he put forward his son Flávio as a candidate in the 2026 presidential election. Running against him was left-wing candidate Lula da Silva, seeking a fourth term.

The documentary profiles key figures in these power struggles: Silas Malafaia, an influential televangelist and kingmaker; Sonia and Estevam Hernandes, organizers of the March for Jesus and owners of a gospel media empire; Pastor Eurico, a member of Congress and a key strategist for the evangelical lobby; and Valdeci, a pastor in one of Rio de Janeiro's favelas — where the church has long since taken on the role of the state. Young preacher João Vitor Ota also reaches millions of young people with his conservative values.

But there are voices pushing back, too: Henrique Vieira, a left-wing pastor and member of Congress, and Pastor Atila, who leads an inclusive evangelical congregation in São Paulo. Moving between megachurches, favelas, TV studios and the halls of Congress, the documentary reveals how the movement is shaping Brazilian politics.

SUN 2026-12-0600:00 DW News - News*00:02 DocFilm*A River Transformed - A New Lease of Life for the Lech

Germany's Lech — once a wild Alpine river — now sometimes little more than a trickle. Water diversion for power generation and climate change is taking its toll. As a result, fewer animals are living on and in the Lech.

One of Germany's largest river renaturation projects has begun north of Augsburg. Over a stretch of 56 kilometers, the Lech is to be given more space to widen naturally. Bank reinforcements are being ripped out, floodplains reactivated and new habitats created. The aim is to partially restore the former wild waterway to its natural state and make it more resilient. A project spanning generations, designed to bring more life to the river and improve flood and groundwater protection. However, it's far from clear how much water the Lech will eventually receive. Energy suppliers LEW and Uniper operate 32 hydroelectric power stations along the river. Over long stretches, this green electricity generation also regulates water flow in the Lech, posing further challenges for the river's renaturation.

The film observes project managers, conservationists, biologists and hydropower operators as they carry out an ambitious project. Thereby documenting the first steps towards reconciling biodiversity, drinking water protection and renewable energy, whilst preserving the ecological function of rivers.

Matabeleland

A story of the trauma of silence — and a dark legacy: Chris' father was killed in Zimbabwe in 1983. His body disappeared without a trace, and Chris feels as if a curse still weighs upon his family.

In 1983, Zimbabwean dictator Robert Mugabe ordered the Matabeleland massacres, in which more than 20,000 people were killed. Nearly four decades later Chris, now living in neighboring Botswana, still carries the trauma of what happened. As the eldest son, he believes his father's soul cannot rest until he is given a dignified burial.

But everything changed when a historic coup removed Mugabe from power. For the first time, Chris dares to believe he can overcome the curse that has haunted him for so long.

01:15 DocFilmHospitals at Breaking Point - A Reliance on Doctors from Abroad

To what extent do German hospitals rely on foreign healthcare professionals? This film looks at expert opinions and the personal experiences of doctors from abroad, to highlight the structural challenges facing the German hospital system.

Germany is training more doctors than ever before - but the shortfall in hospitals still runs to thousands. The reason for this lies less in the absolute figures than in their distribution. Many specialists are drawn to urban centers, while rural areas face a shortage of skilled staff. Furthermore, many doctors are set to retire in the coming years, and an increasing number of them are working part-time. This is creating a noticeable shortage despite the high density of doctors, a problem exacerbated by a hospital system that's under financial pressure in many places.

Although Germany has many hospitals by international standards, these include numerous small clinics in rural areas that are often barely profitable. To counteract this trend, a comprehensive hospital reform was launched at the end of 2024: fewer sites, greater specialization, and more outpatient treatment. While the Joint Federal Committee sees opportunities for greater efficiency in this move, the German Hospital Association warns that new gaps in care could arise in rural areas.

The documentary follows Mohamed Cherbagi, an internist from Syria who most recently worked at a hospital in Freiberg, Saxony, and Ina Viaroukina from Belarus, a junior doctor at the Harzklinikum in Quedlinburg. Both are taking on roles in places where their German colleagues are becoming increasingly hard to find. Through their personal stories, along with insightful commentary from experts, the documentary shows just how dependent many hospitals are on doctors from abroad, and how this dependence is linked to the structural challenges facing the German hospital system.

01:15 DocFilmWinter on the Wadden Sea

Winter hits Germany's remote North Sea islands with the full force of the ocean. Yet between powerful storm surges and icy winds, the North Frisian Halligen region reveals its own unique charm.

Take a journey with us through North Frisia: Peace and solitude, with everything moving at a leisurely pace. During the off-season, residents on the tiny Halligen islands finally have time to catch their breath and prepare for their traditional yearly bonfire, the Biike festival. For many, it's like Christmas and Easter rolled into one — a tradition meant to drive away winter and strengthen the community. In the cold and darkness, locals and the year's first regular visitors gather to mark the end of winter.

The documentary tells the stories of people who make life in this unique landscape possible. There is thatched-roof builder Thore Johannsen, who repairs homes damaged by winter storms. Doctor Dr. Christoph Meyer-Schillhorn regularly travels by rail cart to patients on the tiny islands of Oland and Langeneß. Mudflat mail carrier Knud Knudsen delivers letters, packages and often urgently needed supplies across several miles of tidal flats.

An atmospheric visit to the people of the North Frisian Wadden Sea — and a rare portrait of a region that radiates its own special warmth even in the harshest winters.

01:15 DocFilmFrom Hoarding to Diogenes Syndrome

Diogenes syndrome, also known as senile squalor syndrome, is a complex mental health disorder. People living with the condition may disappear behind closed doors, surrounded by mountains of possessions and trash.

Diogenes syndrome often involves neglect of personal appearance and living spaces, as well as social withdrawal and shame. People living with the disorder generally refuse help. Contrary to a widespread assumption and the name it is sometimes given, the condition doesn't affect only older people. Increasing numbers of young people are also living isolated in their homes, surrounded by objects, keepsakes and packaging that has accumulated over the years.

Diogenes syndrome can begin with a traumatic or life-changing event. The name of the disorder, however, is controversial. It refers to the Greek philosopher Diogenes, who was known for his modest lifestyle and critical attitude toward social conventions.

Lucienne, Jennifer and Nicolas, all living with severe domestic squalor, have agreed to offer a glimpse into their difficult daily lives.

The Nehru-Gandhi Dynasty - An Indian Story - Part 1

It's arguably the greatest political family saga of our time. Spanning five generations, it intertwines India's struggle for independence, political power and personal destinies with the country's rise.

The life stories of Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru, Indira Gandhi, Rajiv Gandhi, Sonia Gandhi and Rahul Gandhi reflect the key stages of Indian history: The struggle for independence from British colonial rule, the establishment of a democratic state, political crises and social upheavals, right through to India's emergence as a global power.

Spanning more than a century, this documentary intertwines the history of a family with that of a nation. It traces political triumphs and setbacks, sheds light on power struggles, personal tragedies and family conflicts, and explores how a single dynasty was able to shape the development of the world's largest democracy over decades.

The family is not related to Mahatma Gandhi. The surname was adopted through Indira Gandhi's marriage to Feroze Gandhi.

Magdeburg - Forgotten After the Attack

In the wake of an attack, who helps those affected when the spotlight fades? We follow survivors and witnesses of the 2024 Magdeburg Christmas market attack and show how difficult the road back to everyday life can be. The focus is on eyewitness Ramona. As she tries to find her way back to normal life, the events of that fateful day continue to haunt her. Over time, the depth of the trauma becomes clear as she struggles to regain a sense of stability.

The film highlights the obstacles faced by those affected when seeking support. Long waiting times, complex procedures and a lack of follow-up services make it difficult to access therapeutic help. Based on personal experiences, a picture emerges of a support system that in many places, is pushed to its limits.

The film also hears from witnesses to the attack on Berlin's Breitscheidplatz in 2016 and the terrorist attack on the Bataclan concert hall in Paris in 2015. The perspectives of experts and people who have provided support over a period of months highlight where it has been effective and where gaps still exist.

Fantasy novels and films let their fans escape the harshness of reality. From "The Lord of the Rings" to "Harry Potter" and "Game of Thrones," these stories also express a longing for another world.

Fantastical worlds peopled by wizards, knights, elves, dwarves and monsters have been captivating millions for decades. The fantasy genre can be found all through modern culture; books, films, TV series, music and games have built up extraordinary parallel worlds. Time and again, the stories serve as responses from their creators and fans to the world that emerged with industrialization. Ever since the 19th century, the real world has been being shaped by environmental destruction, poverty, exploitation, wars and technological change. This documentary explores the enduring fascination with fantasy, from its origins in the 19th century to the present day.

'Stolpersteine', or 'stumbling stones' placed in the pavement commemorate the victims of Nazism. The squares are made of brass and measure 10cm x 10cm. More than 100,000 of these memorial plaques have been laid in over 30 countries.

It's the largest decentralized memorial in the world. The project, launched in the 1990s by German artist Gunter Demnig, continues to grow. This documentary tells some of the personal stories behind the stones.

Most of the inscriptions on the stumbling stones begin with the words: "Here lived". This is followed by a name and the key dates of a life. Gunter Demnig laid the first 'Stolpersteine' in Germany to commemorate the deportation and murder of the Sinti and Roma. This has resulted in a memorial to all victims of National Socialism - supported by the commitment of citizens, who research the history of those who used to live in their neighborhood. Many enquiries now come from all over the world.

Interviews and emotional accounts reveal the significance of the project, particularly for the younger generation and their memory of the Holocaust and Nazi crimes.

But not everyone is in favor: in Munich, Paris and other cities, residents and local authorities oppose the laying of 'Stolpersteine'. The documentary raises awareness of issues surrounding the culture of remembrance. The film calls for a more intensive examination of the past, as well as of the lives commemorated by these small brass plaques.

Diamonds: Symbols of love, power and eternity — yet they're nothing more than compressed carbon. Brilliant marketing turned this gemstone into an object of desire.

Cut and polished, diamonds sparkle like no other gemstone. There seems no limit to the value that can be placed on them. What makes diamonds so alluring? Who created the stories that made diamonds so desirable, and who profits from them?

As early as the 17th century, adventurers brought Indian stones to Europe, wrapped in tales of glamour and wealth. Ever since, myths, marketing and market forces have been shaping their value.

This documentary looks back at a spectacular diamond heist in Dresden, Germany, and explores how the legendary giant diamond Koh-i-Noor manages to provoke conflicts to this day. It examines how De Beers monopolized and controlled the market for decades, and why much of France's crown jewel collection was sold in the 19th century.

The film takes viewers to the diamond districts of Antwerp and New York. It goes behind the doors of dealers, cutters and designers, offering a behind-the-scenes look at an exclusive, multibillion-dollar industry. It traces the legacy of colonial plunder to the blood diamonds that financed civil wars. In the end, one question remains: Why do we place such extraordinary value on a stone made of carbon?

The Nehru-Gandhi Dynasty - An Indian Story - Part 2

It's arguably the greatest political family saga of our time. Spanning five generations, it intertwines India's struggle for independence, political power and personal destinies with the country's rise.

The life stories of Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru, Indira Gandhi, Rajiv Gandhi, Sonia Gandhi and Rahul Gandhi reflect the key stages of Indian history: The struggle for independence from British colonial rule, the establishment of a democratic state, political crises and social upheavals, right through to India's emergence as a global power.

Spanning more than a century, this documentary intertwines the history of a family with that of a nation. It traces political triumphs and setbacks, sheds light on power struggles, personal tragedies and family conflicts, and explores how a single dynasty was able to shape the development of the world's largest democracy over decades.

The family is not related to Mahatma Gandhi. The surname was adopted through Indira Gandhi's marriage to Feroze Gandhi.

Cool Choirs

Did you think choral singing was old fashioned? The girls' choir Mädchenchor Hamburg have gone viral with their performance of "Fire" in the famous Elbphilharmonie concert hall.

The young women in Hamburg aren't the only choir making waves. The "Heaven Can Wait" senior choir cover songs by quirky, current German bands Deichkind and Zartmann. Star composer Eric Whitacre experiments with voices from around the globe. In Lithuania, around 24,000 young people sing together for their country. Powerful voices that can speak straight to the heart. As early as the late 1980s, Lithuanians were banding together to sing, which even helped contribute to the fall of the Iron Curtain. In the country today, singing has once again become political. The major song festivals are an expression of cultural identity and a statement against latent threats from Russia.

Singing makes us happy and releases endorphins. Singing together makes us doubly happy. Choir singing can help combat loneliness, can be highly exacting and even serve as a school for life. It teaches people how to find their own voice without drowning out others. After all, if you don't listen well, you can never harmonize.

01:00 DW News - News01:03 DocFilm*When Night Falls in Paris

Paris — the City of Love, a fashion capital and a dream destination for millions. Journalist Anne Arend takes viewers on a nighttime journey through a city many consider the most beautiful in the world.

From dusk to dawn: Journalist Anne Arend meets the people who work, struggle, help, hope — and those who shape the city. The result is a portrait of a metropolis that never stands still.

Few places represent nighttime Paris as much as the Moulin Rouge. But what few people know is that the lavish revue theater also has a basement where Jérôme Marin, aka Monsieur K, and his "Créatures" return to the roots of cabaret. Radical, playful and always close to the audience, they put on a show unlike any other. The camera follows the troupe from makeup through their final cigarette on the roof of the famous red windmill.

At around 2 a.m., the halls of the wholesale market open. The film crew can barely keep up as it races through the miles of food stalls with restaurant chef Rodolphe, finding fish, meat, cheese and vegetables. He quickly abandons the plan he made beforehand, preferring to draw inspiration from the vendors for his seasonal cuisine. He also never forgets to bring his wife a bouquet of flowers. Amid cold warehouses, rough voices and split-second decisions, a Paris most people never see emerges: A place where the food supply for a massive city arrives.

For the people living in tents beneath the Metro bridges, a meal in a restaurant seems worlds away. They, too, are a part of the city's nighttime landscape. Laura, Anouk and Arthur head out in the evening to support them. The three young people are part of a growing group who would rather get involved than go out partying.

The city's contrasts become stark when the film crew visits the studio of an up-and-coming designer presenting his collection for the first time, before traveling to the suburbs, where a railway employee channels the human tide of the morning commute. They also trail a DJ campaigning for greater safety in clubs and the night shift of the river brigade on the Seine, whose crew has had to pull more than one reckless reveler from the water.

This journey through the night reveals a Paris that hides very different realities behind its familiar facade. A city that never sleeps — and, above all, never stops surprising.

Church Without Racism?

Racism has many faces, even within the Christian faith. Those affected cite workplace discrimination; People of Color are underrepresented in senior positions. Can prejudice be overcome?

For a long time, Christian church campaigns mostly portrayed people from the Global South as people in need of aid. That's set to change: People of Color are calling for a greater say and stronger representation on church bodies. The church is responding - yet racist attitudes and hostility persist.

For pastor Égide Muziazia, discriminatory insults forced him out of public life - but also fostered greater solidarity within the Catholic Diocese of Münster.

Sarah Vecera works for an international communion of Protestant churches. She writes, hosts her own podcast and runs anti-racism workshops. Nicolas Moumouni is an advisor on intercultural development for the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Northern Germany, and Father Uchenna Aba from Goch-Kessel in North Rhine-Westphalia draws upon his African heritage in his work as a Catholic chaplain.

01:15 DocFilmDresden's Sweet Traditions

Dresden has enchanted visitors with its sweet specialties and artful desserts for centuries. Traditional craftsmanship, time-honored recipes and works of sweet art are an integral part of the city's culinary culture.

The German Culinary Archive in Dresden is the largest publicly accessible collection of cookery books, menus and food lists in the German-speaking world. The approximately 1,200 volumes from Walter Poganietz's donation alone document the development of patisserie from the 19th century to the present day. They tell the story of traditions, techniques and changing tastes. There are historical reasons why a meal traditionally begins with a hearty dish and ends with something sweet. Historian Josef Matzerath refers to ancient theories of digestion: "Sweet dishes were once thought to aid the 'digestion' of food in the body. Even though this idea has long since been superseded, the desire for a delightful finale remains," he says.

The confectioner's art retains its importance, as demonstrated by pastry chef Sophie Schinko from Moritzburg. After finishing her education she entered the profession, learning her craft at the historic Hotel Sacher in Vienna. It was there that she realized: The Sacher Torte is the ultimate test of a pastry chef's precision and skill.

Top chef and pâtissier Johann Lafer also advocates mindful enjoyment rather than strict abstinence. He says that attitudes towards food have changed, but special desserts remain the highlights of any cuisine. The quality of the ingredients is crucial: when you start with the best, that authenticity will make it taste incredible, he says.

We know that life in Dresden has been sweetened by treats for centuries. A fact illustrated by a world-famous work of art: "The Chocolate Girl" by Jean-Étienne Liotard, housed in the Old Masters Picture Gallery. The depiction of a chambermaid carrying a cup of chocolate on a silver tray has captivated people since 1745.

Back then, chocolate was a luxury commodity. Initially prized for its medicinal qualities, the beverage later became a status symbol at European royal courts.

Diamonds: Symbols of love, power and eternity — yet they're nothing more than compressed carbon. Brilliant marketing turned this gemstone into an object of desire.

Cut and polished, diamonds sparkle like no other gemstone. There seems no limit to the value that can be placed on them. What makes diamonds so alluring? Who created the stories that made diamonds so desirable, and who profits from them?

As early as the 17th century, adventurers brought Indian stones to Europe, wrapped in tales of glamour and wealth. Ever since, myths, marketing and market forces have been shaping their value.

This documentary looks back at a spectacular diamond heist in Dresden, Germany, and explores how the legendary giant diamond Koh-i-Noor manages to provoke conflicts to this day. It examines how De Beers monopolized and controlled the market for decades, and why much of France's crown jewel collection was sold in the 19th century.

The film takes viewers to the diamond districts of Antwerp and New York. It goes behind the doors of dealers, cutters and designers, offering a behind-the-scenes look at an exclusive, multibillion-dollar industry. It traces the legacy of colonial plunder to the blood diamonds that financed civil wars. In the end, one question remains: Why do we place such extraordinary value on a stone made of carbon?

How to Survive a Worldwide Hit Record

A film that tells the story of musicians with the same unusual experience: They've all landed a global hit — just one.

In a series of interviews, seven of these one-hit wonders recount astonishing stories that begin — and sometimes end — with a single hit. The film takes viewers on a journey from Germany to the US music capitals of Los Angeles, Nashville and Memphis, as well as to the Scottish city of Glasgow.

Along with the stars themselves, the film features renowned music experts such as Volkmar Kramarz, who offer context for the artists' stories and explain the global hit phenomenon. In his final major interview in the film, Stan Perkins recalls his father, Carl Perkins, and the drama surrounding his rock 'n' roll anthem "Blue Suede Shoes." Bruce Channel, now 86 years old and from Texas, recounts how his 1961 global hit "Hey! Baby" enjoyed a massive comeback thanks to the movie "Dirty Dancing." And how the track later became a stadium anthem following a cover version by the Austrian DJ Ötzi. Thelma Houston ("Don't Leave Me This Way") and Anita Ward ("Ring My Bell") recount their roller-coaster rides through the dazzling disco era of the 1970s. A journey that ended for Anita Ward at the till of a department store. Lou Bega recalls his meteoric rise with "Mambo No. 5" in the late 1990s and how he found God. Producer Alex Christensen speaks with great candor about the rigors of the music business and explains how, with ATC in 2000, he turned a Russian song into a true one-hit wonder. And Scottish singer Nathan Evans describes how the song "Wellerman" turned his world upside down, catapulting him from a life as a postman to that of a TikTok billionaire in 2021. "How to Survive a Worldwide Hit Record" is a journey through eight decades of music history, exploring songs entire generations can still hum under their breath.

Lars used to be a police officer. Together with his wife Sandy and their young son, he moved from Germany to a remote Scottish island in the Atlantic. Colonsay has only 120 inhabitants, a shop and a café - and not much else. Lars was keen to escape big city life and pitched the idea to his Scottish wife, Sandy. She agreed to relocate their family and move to Colonsay. The remote island is where she grew up; she and Lars even got married there a few years ago.

Lars is a lively, sociable type. Will the solitude and almost eerie tranquility on the island in winter suit him? Lars' father-in-law runs an oyster farm on Colonsay. He'd been looking for someone to take over the business and now Lars is there to help. It's a tough business. In summer, life feels like a holiday. But in winter, 'the demons come', as the islanders say. Lars, too, is struggling with his past. It's only light for a few hours a day in winter, and the island is often battered by storms. While Sandy starts working from home again, Lars spends a lot of time with their son. He's also a keen cold-water swimmer. Whenever he can, he ventures into the icy, raging seas that surround the island.

The vision of settling space is currently getting enthusiastic attention. Private space companies promise humanity a future on other planets. Critics warn it's a dangerous illusion.

In making promises to settle the cosmos, the space industry is feeding dangerous fantasies. Not only does it distract from the fact that Earth is the only habitable planet we know of — it also helps accelerate the destruction of that planet. Scientists, climate activists and Indigenous communities are challenging this new vision of space exploration. They're calling for space to be preserved as the common heritage of humanity.

But what are the consequences of this new space race? Are we actually on the threshold of a multiplanetary civilization? Or is the idea more the dream of power, progress and limitless growth? And if the grand promises of space exploration really are mere illusion, who is benefiting — and who pays the price?

The Crans-Montana fire was one of the worst disasters of its kind ever to happen in Switzerland. Valentin and Ferdinand survived it — but the memories will be with them for the rest of their lives.

On the night of January 1, 2026, brothers Valentin and Ferdinand — like many other young people — were celebrating New Year's Eve at the bar "Le Constellation" when a fire suddenly broke out. Mobile phone videos later showed that sparklers on champagne bottles had set the bar's ceiling alight. 41 people died and 115 were injured — many of them teenagers. Valentin is 16. He suffered severe burns on New Year's Eve and lay in a coma for weeks. Today, he's fighting his way back to life. His brother Ferdinand, who's three years older, managed to escape almost unscathed — but went back into the bar several times, searching for Valentin and helping other survivors. The images from that night still haunt him to this day.

The criminal investigation into the disaster has highlighted a lack of fire safety measures, blocked escape routes and flammable materials, raising questions over who bears ultimate responsibility for this tragedy — in the ongoing case against bar owners Jacques and Jessica Moretti.

01:15 DocFilmThe Secret World of the Nobility

The 1919 abolition of the nobility's privileges means old German titles have no legal significance. But members of Germany's former aristocracy still maintain significant social, economic and cultural influence.

The journalist Jochen Breyer visits castles, hunting parties and aristocratic balls. He meets Baron Nikolaus von Gayling-Westphal, the 26th Lord of Ebnet Castle near Freiburg. Gayling-Westphal lives in a 276-year-old castle that never really gets warm and incurs around 10,000 euros in service charges each month. Despite having taken a fall, he receives Breyer for an interview in his four-poster bed. "The old traditions, the hallmarks of the nobility — you couldn't just ban those," says the baron. "I can tell who is noble and who isn't." He says he can trace his family tree back to the year 1080. That, too, is what defines the nobility.

That members of the former nobility still own palaces and castles isn't surprising. But there's less awareness of the fact that these old aristocratic families still hold immense economic power through land ownership. For example, large swathes of Germany's forests.

Günther Graf von der Schulenburg manages 5,000 hectares of woodland — an area roughly equivalent to 7,000 football pitches. For him, ownership is both a privilege and a responsibility. "I benefit financially from trees that my grandfather planted. And when I plant trees today, my son or grandson will benefit from them," he says. "We believe that property should be kept together."

As the film shows, today's nobility is less about glamor and more about duty. Possessions aren't consumed but preserved — in the knowledge that they form part of a long lineage. At the same time, Breyer observes how the next generation of young aristocrats networks at social events and how the survival of a family, in accordance with historic tradition, still depends on male heirs. "There were moments between the polo tournament and the hat competition when I thought: 'This can't be real,'" says Breyer. "I felt as though I'd ended up in a TV series about the aristocracy. But it was all real."
